Where the art of politics meets the politics of art

In 2017 Centre for Fair Political Analysis decided that it would like to take its practice of equitable analysis one step further and create a series of events centered around this issue. This is why we launched the Equity Salon (Méltányosság Szalon) which provides a possibility to meet those who share our philosophy twice a year. This philosophy is open and tolerant however we would like to provide a possibility for meaningful debate amongst the representatives of different ideologies. This is why we have invited opinion leaders and experts from all sides of the ideological spectrum when evaluating the current political situation.

Aside from debates on politics and political theory the Salon always provides a possibility to meet respected public figures such as actors, musicians, directors and other intellectuals. We talk to them about the public aspects of their field since we feel that in a democracy it is not just party politics that is important but also what possibilities arts and civil society have in forming the democratic morale.

At its previous Salon in December of 2017 CFPA launched the new book of its director Ervin Csizmadia titled The Logic of Hungarian Political Development: Can the present be compared to the past? In 2018 we aim to continue the Equity Salon with a wide array of guests who can help shine a light on the existing „bridges“ in today's fragmented society and where new ones can be built.

Our motto? Democracy is made not just by politicians and members of civil society but by those analysts as well who talk in a different manner about politics.
